

Veena Mendiratta

(b. 1948)

Veena Mendiratta received her BTech in engineering from the Indian Institute of Technology (New Delhi) in 1970, and then earned her PhD from Northwestern University in Operations Research in 1981. She worked for Bell Labs for more than 35 years doing research on network reliability and telecom data analytics. Mendiratta is currently an Adjunct Professor at Northwestern. She is an author on more than 65 research papers and holds 5 US patents. Mendiratta has done outreach through the Society for Industrial and Applied Mathematics as part of their Visiting Lecturer Program and did project-based exchanges while part of the Fulbright Specialist Program in India (2012) and Norway (2015).

This poster is part of the EvenQuads project, which combines innovative mathematical card games with learning about amazing women mathematicians. The project celebrates the 50th anniversary of the Association for Women in Mathematics.

If you want to learn more about EvenQuads, scan the QR code below.

EVENQUADS

